7.Cause of occurrence:

On December 31, the District Court of Munich found that a number of HTC devices infringe the German part of patent EP 1148681 ("Method for Transferring Resource Information"). We are extremely pleased that the Court also imposed a bond of €400 million on the case which Nokia must pay before they can enforce the decision against HTC. Naturally, we will be appealing today's decision of infringement immediately as we firmly believe the patent is invalid and we will continue with our invalidity action pending before the German Federal Patents Court. Even though we believe the first instance court should have sided with HTC on the issue of infringement, notwithstanding the appeal that we will file, we are also now looking into modifications for our handsets to avoid infringement of the patent in question. The decision, if it is enforced by payment of the €400m bond, will apply to HTC, not to our customers and we will make an urgent application to the Court of Appeal to seek a stay of any enforcement.
